It additionally provides critical thinking, rationality and logic and thus empowers an individual.

1. INTRODUCTION

The term “life skill” is defined as psychosocial abilities that enables an individual so that he can effectively deal various difficulties/ challenges in life. A child needs lot of skills beyond the fixed set of traditional skills which involve learning, reading, writing skills etc. Therefore, to practically face various situations that pertain to the challenges in various contours and domains of his life beyond academics, the life skill plays an important role. WHO refers it as a fundamental skill that contributes to the healthy life. It is a broad skills that includes the problem solving, decision making, goal setting, creative thinking, critical thinking, coping with stress and emotions, empathy, self awareness, self assertiveness. Life skills are defined as “ the abilities for positive behavior that enable and empower to meet the challenges of life”. Life skills helps in communicating effectively, empathize with others, think objectively and creative the solutions for problems, cope with stress and help in building the positive relationships and be aware of the self. Skills are generally identified as thinking skill which involves the skills related to the thinking, and social skill which helps us to effectively deal with others.

The elements of ten core life skills as identified by WHO are:-

I) Self-Awareness

Self-awareness is the concrete knowledge about self which involves paying attention to the internal state of the emotions and having an impartial assessment of them. It includes recognizing the strengths, limitations/ shortcomings, desires, etc. It plays a pivotal role in helping to recognize in the situations when one is stressed or troubled. It also plays a key role in maintaining the effective communication and the key understanding and empathy with others.

II) Empathy

It is another important skill which helps us to understand others, what they are going through in their frame of reference or viewpoint. It reflects the unity and understanding of the emotions with another person. Empathy means mimicking the feelings of another person. There are multiple ways of the expression of the emotions of a person which involves gesture, voice tone, facial expression etc. A person with good life skill understands quickly the pain that another person is going through and responds to the situations appropriately. It is believed that by being an empathetic person increases the chances of learning, collaboration and dealings. It brings harmony, togetherness and resonance and thus helps in tackling the stress and strain.

III) Critical Thinking

It is skill that helps to evaluate the information that we have gathered related to some event with an objective and purpose. Doing a thing without thinking about the various pros and cons of it may land us in difficulties. It is important to know what we are doing and having a fair utility/ purpose of it and hence critical thinking is very important aspect. It helps us to make decisions, solving the problems, passing the judgments, and ensures the maximum utilization of the resources.

IV) Creative Thinking

It involves an ability which defies parochial, naive and limited approach to thinking process. It implies an ability to produce a novel, beneficial and purposeful result/ solution to a problem. It is a multifaceted feature which is build on the divergent thinking, expertise, etc. Putting the disconnected/ seemingly unrelated things together and crafting a new or something unique is also a creative art. Creative thinking comes from a burning desire to accomplish something that is new and useful. The divergent thinking and lateral thinking can be used to create new ideas and hence the creative thinking.

V) Decision -Making

It is an important skill that is utilized before problem solving. The decision making expedites the task and gets the task done successfully in little time. The model of decision making involves some steps which are:

- a) Problem finding: It involves locating a problem and having an in depth study of it.

It is a skill that is of paramount importance in life skills. Problems are the situations that are hard to circumvent. No matter whether the problem is small or big, they are to be faced. If we fail to find the solutions to the problems, we don't accomplish our goals, and run into trouble, stress and anxiety. The problems act as impediment and hinder the way to development and prosperity. If our approach to the problems fails us to reach a solution, we are rendered helpless and redundant. Therefore, problem solving is a vital aspect in the overall success.

VII) Interpersonal Relationship

This skill pertains to maintaining good relations with peers. This skill helps us to keep intact the relations and enables us to do or don't do things in our friendship space. This skill helps in maintaining the long term relationship with others by giving the respect and care they deserve. There are the places where this skill finds its application which involves workplaces, home, friendship space. Giving a constructive criticism to the people you know, encouraging the people in your circle to do good, handling disagreements, making them feel important paves way for the good relations with each other, and thus bring harmony, glory and success in life.

VIII) Effective Communication

A confident, non hesitant and clear articulation of thoughts is regarded as an effective verbal communication while as confused, stumbling and muddled presentation of ideas is a bored and often a non-useful information. Therefore, it is important that an individual communicates well so that the listeners/ peers don't get bored and find it interesting and enjoyable. Thus, in order to build relationships, collaboration, it is important to persuade and communicate well with the listeners/ peers.

IX) Coping with Stress

It is an important skill related to the ability of how to deal with stress. Stress is caused due to an excessive pressure/ burden. There are various ways of dealing with stress. Avoiding preoccupation, negative thoughts, and focusing only on the strengths can help us deal effectively with the stress.

X) Coping with Emotions

Emotions is a response to something/ someone. Emotions can be positive or negative. The negative emotions include anger, worry, etc while as positive emotions include hope, love etc. Emotions are a vital component of our daily lives. If we mute the emotions, the life would appear dull. The manifestation of deficiency in emotional management appears in the form of violence, anger, suicides etc.
